The Devil Wears Diapers? There's Now A Conde Nast Children's Book

By Gina Marinelli

The chicest new children's book doesn't take place in the lands of Narnia or even an English rose garden (cough, cough, Madonna), but rather the magical, mystical floors of 4 Times Square. The Super Adventures of Sophie and the City: All in a Day's Work is less of a tell-all and more of an Eloise At The Plaza-esque look at the famous fashion offices at the Condé Nast building. The wide-eyed tot doesn't cast spells but rather makes friends with André Leon Talley (in a Louis Vuitton cloak, obvs) and fashion fairy godmother Isaac Mizrahi, who sports Swarovski crystal wings. Formerly with Vogue and Vanity Fair, author Kelly Florio Kasouf knows all about exploring the company's storied halls—she's the daughter of former president and C.E.O. of Condé Nast, Steven Florio, and the tome is Kasouf's continuation of a project he started before his passing in 2007. Pick up your copy exclusively at Barneys to get a cute perspective of 4TS before the stampede of heels move to the WTS. Can anyone say movie deal? (WWD)
